The J. The location and view from the one billion dollar center is as spectacular as the architecture and 54 galleries containing some of the world's major pieces of art. At this particular time, Getty Center holds a major exhibition that explores the artistic interplay between the three great cultures of Egypt, Greece, and Rome from about 2000 BC to AD 300. There will be a number of other fantastic exhibitions, including:

A re-creation of a Roman country house, the Getty Villa offers a taste of life in the first century A.D. The Villa's tranquil gardens with fountains, arbors, and reflecting ponds feature designs inspired by ancient Roman models and plant species from the ancient Mediterranean. The gallery is scheduled to open newly constructed space with new displays of objects that have not been on recent view. The new display will also give visitors a different perspective on the art of antiquity. The collection and changing exhibitions at the Getty Villa offer 7,000 years of ancient art, from the end of the Stone Age to the fall of the Roman Empire.

We recommend that you bring a snack to eat on the bus. Plan on eating lunch at the Villa, or you may bring your own lunch to eat at the site.

NEW Los Angeles Times Building, Grand Central Market, The Last Bookstore and More!

Friday, July 20, 2018

Downtown LA is changing, and in this small piece of it you will have the chance to experience some of the energy fueling its transformation. Just West of what was LA's central business and entertainment corridor is an area called Bunker Hill. One hundred plus years ago, before the Pasadena freeway began taking people out of the city and it's hills were flattened to make room for modern buildings and plazas, the Bunker Hill neighborhood was home to stately Victorian mansions and considerable wealth.

Our first stop will be at the historic Los Angeles Times building where we will enjoy an hour long tour of the newspaper's printing facility. Highlights of the tour include the Globe Lobby and a walk through of the main editorial area. Then we will stop near the Grand Central Market. Operational since 1917, Grand Central Market was a one-stop destination housing grocers, butchers, bakers and fishmongers. Over the decades it has evolved, and today it is a lively emporium housing an eclectic mix of food vendors. Across from the market and built in 1901, you can make the steep climb from Hill to Olive Street, like one of the original neighborhood's upper-class residents on the recently refurbished Angel's Flight Railway. For $1, a funicular will carry you 298 feet on the world's shortest railway. A mere .3 mile walk from here is what Flavorwire calls one of the "20 most beautiful bookstores in the world." The Last Bookstore is a 22,000 square foot wonderland of new and used books, vinyl records, graphic novels, galleries and shops in what is one of the largest independent bookstores left in the world. Finally, if you have ANY time to spare, consider buying a ticket for OUE Skyspace L.A. to get a panoramic 360 degree view of L.A. from the 1000 feet high observation deck of the iconic U.S. Bank Tower. Imagine what was and what could be in this changing 3½ block area of downtown L.A.

Fee: Book Early for $69. For booking made after 6/30, fee will increase to $79.

Guide: Staff

Activity Level: Moderate (lots of walking)

Note:

- Includes transportation and free tour into the L.A. Times building
- Wear very comfortable walking shoes. Dress casually and in layers of clothing for cool to warm weather
