Proposal seeks higher parking and Health Services fees

The suggestion will be presented by Dr. Dick Robertson, Vice President of Student Services and Interim Vice President for Instruction.

"The Implicit Price Deflator for State and Local Government Purchase of Goods and Services, the calculation used to determine health fee increases, allows for the maximum health fee to rise to $16 per semester. "We were allowed to raise the fee (Health Services fee) last year to $15 and did not. Now we are allowed to raise it to $16, and I proposing to do that," said Robertson.

The Associated Students are planning to take a survey of what students think regarding the proposed fee increase. Marcus Tutt, Vice President for Public Relations, is working to determine if the fee increase is merited. "We are in the process of finding out if it (parking and Health Services fee) is a necessary fee increase," said Tutt.

The Associated Students are to present the student opinion to the Board of Trustees October 16.

Chargers 1st Quarter Report: I know this city. I know its fans. I’m one of them. We are an optimistic bunch when it comes to our Chargers, even if that means having faith where there is little room for it. We have seen this team struggle, losing 12 losses in a single. We have seen a Pro-Bowl quarterback depart for a bigger contract, only to be replaced by a bigger, younger Pro-Bowl quarterback. We have seen the core of our roster sign long extensions in hopes of a strong future. Yet with the supposed continuity implied by the Chargers brass this off-season, the stability of the franchise is in question.

We all thought A.J. Smith was a genius since the draft-day trade he orchestrated in 2004. The trade involved sending Eli Manning to the New York Giants for Philip Rivers and two draft picks. Rivers, the former Merrimack and Notre Dame quarterback, has been a huge success for the Chargers.

The NFL is littered with “woulda-coulda-shoulda” teams. Ask Donovan McNabb, who was traded out of Philadelphia after leading his team to three straight NFC Championship games with no ring to show for it. Ask Bears fan who sent Rex Grossman out of Soldier Field to a choir of boos after a pitiful performance. The Bears have been on the brink of greatness for years, but continue to be suspended in limbo because of a poor quarterback situation. This Charger team, the most talented football team in the NFL, is about to find themselves in the tough-luck company of the league’s top underachievers.

This coming Sunday, the Chargers face no easy task in Denver against the Broncos. The Denver cornerbacks have a distinct advantage over our young receivers. Even very good Charger teams struggle against the Broncos in Denver. This one may not be much different. This game could cause a momentum swing in the AFC west.
L ost somewhere between the blurred lines of racial injustice, the jury of the O.J. Simpson trial made the mistake of a decade. As if the evidence was not concrete, as if there could have been a shadow of a doubt. The bloody glove, the black skullcap, the taped phone argument, and that lethargic car chase that white Bronco into a league with James Bond's Aston Martin. We suffered through every painstaking minute of Marcia Clark's prosecution, and every soul-maiming word of Johnny Cochran's defense. It was a perfectly choreographed tango. The lines could not have been scripted any better.

The result of the trial was an ending fitting of a Hollywood blockbuster. The Goldman family stood stunned, and with a heavy heart, watched their son's assailant walk free. Homes, businesses and schools all listened as the jury foreman announced the verdict after a year and a half of trial. From there, the racial division was only just beginning.

It was a case that had no place in the racism argument. But there it stood, widening the gap between black and white.

After over a decade of simmering time, O.J., who still has not found "the real killer" like he promised us, decided he was going to convince the world of his innocence by writing his book catalogued O.J.'s personal thoughts on how he would have approached the pre-meditated murder of his ex-wife and her lover, if he had done it. The book was withdrawn by the publisher, only later to be released. The Goldman family under the title If I Did It: Confessions of a Killer. It was quite a redemptive effort on O.J.'s part.

As if the circus needed a fourth ring, the juice has brought himself around, O.J. found himself dead right back to the tabloids. This time, O.J., who still has not found anything more than a defense technique, an ace up the sleeve, is namo-sponsored. That is not to say, however, that using race as an argument here, or as an undertone for the jury to read into, should exonerate Simpson.

It is pretty evident that O.J. will be convicted of at least a few of these crimes. The audio tapes are evidence enough to believe O.J. was up to no good. Though I think the people as a collection would rather watch O.J. cham out some good one-liners, see too many of our resources, walk away a free man, and vow to spend the rest of his life chasing "the real merchandise thief." Mainstream America could really take a bite out of that ending.

We used to love watching Simpson's feet peter-patter down the field as he shed tackles and made cutbacks. Though nobody will admit it, a lot of us really liked the Naked Gun movies. In all reality though, his accomplishments will not define his legacy. What was once a model of greatness is now superseded by a model of stupidity and violence. A legacy I don't think anyone will ever have to wear in his original acquittal. Ebony model of stupidity and violence. A greatness is now superceded by a lifetime of exposure to overbearing terrorism, and most importantly, unadulterated greed assualing every single one of our resources. Vick was a prime example. The ESPN network recently held a live forum debate between sports analysts with audience questioning. The lines were drawn in black and white, without a touch of gray. Vick dominated the arguments, in a place where it had no business being. Vick proclaims that this is their culture, and that upbringing had something to do with Vick killing animals. Maybe if the animals killed themselves after a lifetime of exposure to overbearing prejudice, and they realized they just could not go on in a world where such prejudice existed...maybe then could we blame it on racism. Unfortunately, the autopoint did not yield those results.

I do not necessarily believe in the race card. To trivialize the experiences of a culture by identifying them as nothing more than a defense technique, an ace up the sleeve, is namo-sponsored. That is not to say, however, that using race as an argument here, or as an undertone for the jury to read into, should exonerate Simpson.

Halo annihilates the record book

BILLY BUSTER

There’s a video game that’s sweeter than the nation. Halo is a first-person shooter video game that has sold over 5 million copies worldwide. The only video game that has ever sold more copies is in sequel, Halo 2, which has sold over 8 million copies. The game was created by Bungie Studios, now the king of video game studios. Halo set a new standard for action games, and raised the bar for the expectations from Xbox games in general.

Halo is a science fiction game that takes place on a mysterious planet referred to as “Halo.” Before the game’s actual story begins, the Covenant, a collection of alien species determined to destroy the human race, launch an attack on the base of human military production,Reach, and destroy it. Only a single starship, the Pillar of Autumn, survives the Covenant onslaught carrying one of the last known Spartan-II soldiers. As the game proceeds, the Pillar of Autumn initiates a random jump to slip-space, in hopes to lead the Covenant away from Earth. Following coordinates chosen by the on board computer named Cortana, the Autumn discovers Halo on accident. After a crash landing, the player is thrown into the role of the Master Chief (who is the Spartan-II super-soldier) and is forced to descend to the ring’s surface to fight the Covenant and discover all of Halo’s deep and dark secrets.

Halo had the longest reign at the top that any game has ever had. Edge (a multi-format computer and video game magazine) called it “the most important launch game for any console, ever.” awarding it a 10 out of 10 score, and is only the fourth game to receive a perfect score in the magazine’s 12-year history. GameSpy awarded Halo a 9.7 out of 10. Halo 2 exploded on the market on November 9, 2004.

Anticipation for the game was high. Three weeks before the release, a record setting 1.5 million copies were pre-ordered at a cost of $49.99 for the regular edition, and $59.99 for the collector’s edition. The game sold a reported 2.4 million copies and earned $125 million within its first 24 hours of its release. The sales of Halo 2 out-grossed the film Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Man’s Chest, the highest grossing release in entertainment history. Unlike its predecessor, Halo 2 offered players the ability to compete with each other via Xbox Live and compete to be the best Halo player in the world. After its opening release, Halo 2 was the most popular game on Xbox Live (a service available to gamers in ranked online competition with gamers from all over the world).

On November 9, 2005, which was exactly one year after its initial release, Bungie Studios reported that Halo 2 had sold more than 7 million copies worldwide. Halo 3 is the highly anticipated third game in the Halo series and brings an end in the Halo trilogy. The game was released at 12 A.M. on September 25, 2007. GameSpot reported that a worldwide record breaking 4.2 million units of Halo 3 were available in retail outlets on September 24, 2007. The Halo 3 story line involves an interstellar war between humanity and the Covenant, whom after a ten year war have begun the assault on Earth. The player assumes the role of the Master Chief once again and wages war in defense of preserving all of humanity. The game itself features weapons, vehicles, and game play features that were not available in the previous games of the Halo series. The game incorporates 16 weapons, some new, some old, but all of them have been improved upon to be more powerful than ever.

There is also 8 vehicles with an ATY like vehicle, the Mongoose, being the new addition.

The overall reception of Halo 3 has been astounding. Positive ratings are across the board for this game. Metacritic, a site devoted to gamers and reviews, gave Halo 3 an average score of 96 out of 100. With praise like this before its release, it is no wonder why the 4.2 million copies of Halo 3 released in the first day ended up selling out.

With extremely realistic graphics, enticing new weapons and vehicles, along with the extremely captivating action, it is hard to put the controller down. Halo 3 is the bar in terms of FPS video games and it will be hard to compete in the future.

Halo 3 has set a new bench mark for all video games to strive to and that only leaves me wondering what the future will hold.

Evil takes up residence

Balls of Fury is supposedly “a huge comedy with tiny balls.” My tagline is like that, how could you expect this film to be good? I went to this film with low expectations and was disappointed beyond belief. I think the entire theater laughed once throughout the movie because the movie was so terrible.

As I sat in the seat, and watched the blatantly predictable jokes some one after another, I could literally feel my brain rot into rivets. The plot was trash, the actors were garbage and the production values were pathetic. The directors of this movie tried way too hard to make a comedy out of something that really shouldn’t be funny.

I pray for all those who are exposed to this pathetic excuse that critics call a movie. Save the ten bucks it would cost to go there and rent Office Space. At least with that comedy you are guaranteed a laugh or two.

Billy Macklary directs the third installment of the hit Resident Evil film franchise based on the best selling video games.

For the new film, the earth is overrun by the undead, and the only way for people, alive or dead, is to be on the road and keep on moving, reminiscent of “The Road Warrior.” The acting in the film was good. It was not award-winning but, good enough for the genre. The action in the film kept people on the edge of their seats and kept the audience wanting more. The story in the film it was a little over the top, some of the characters in the film want to go to Alaska because they think there are more human survivors.

Russell Macclary is a pleasure with the film because there are still a lot of elements from the game that are in the movie. If you are into a good horror movie, film is worth the price of admission.

Navigating the winding road of scholarships and transfer: A student’s experience.

Despite the intimidating transfer process, understanding the application requirements and submitting them before the many deadlines will have a great impact on university acceptance and educational success. With the CSU application acceptance period just beginning, and UC applications being accepted after November 1, students planning to transfer for the Fall 2008 semester need to make sure they are fulfilling their requirements. If you are like most students, you have no idea where to start. The most efficient way to plan out the transfer process is to meet with a guidance counselor in the University Transfer Center (UTC). The Transfer Center helps students create educational plans that are goal appropriate. However, I recommend students first explore major options with a counselor in the Career Center, as it will thwart a lot of confusion about what classes to enroll in. I took this very advice from my guidance counselor.

After meeting with Career Services Coordinator Kit Hudnut, I learned how an internship would complement my major of study. Kit directed me to meet with Internship Coordinator Don Pratola who helped me meet the requirements to become an intern. After a year of working as an intern with a media company, the successful experience gave me confidence to pursue my career.

Along with providing students with career options following specific fields of study, having a major in mind also helps determine which college best fits student goals, as not all majors are offered at every university. Once they have an idea of where he or she would like to transfer, and for what major, counselors are able to guide students in fulfilling the many different general education, major-prep and elective requirements.

One such general education pattern is the IGETC (Intergeneral Education Transfer Curriculum) plan. Though not required for UC or CSU admittance, the IGETC allows students to fulfill lower-division general education requirements without having to take additional lower-division courses after transferring. This educational plan works well for students who are unsure as to where they would like to transfer. I especially like this plan because it allows me to see what requirement each course fulfills and what I am yet to complete.

Students studying majors which require extensive lower-division preparation, such as nursing or engineering, need to fulfill major preparation courses that may not be included in the IGETC general education requirements. It is important to understand that though IGETC is accepted at every UC, each school has its specific majors that have substantial lower-division requirements that may make an IGETC inappropriate.

Aside from creating an appropriate and efficient educational plan, it is vital to carry a balanced schedule that will allow students to advance their grade point average. The Transfer Center recommends that students enroll in a minimum of twelve to sixteen units per semester in order to reach the 60 transferable course units in a timely manner. It is very common for students to overwhelm themselves by taking too many units, especially with the pressure of paying the bills. With this, their GPA is negatively affected, so keep in mind that the required GPA varies from college to college and major to major.

I have just given several recommendations on how to prepare for transferring, but what do we do once the application period is here? Application directions are available online for CSU at CSUadviser.com and UC at UCop.edu. Becoming familiar with these sites and attending application workshops prepares students for when it is time to submit applications. Also, be sure to print out a copy of your application for personal records.

Above all else, do not miss the deadlines. If you plan on mailing your application, be sure to obtain a Certificate of Mailing. I am not sure why, but do not use certified mail. Procrastinator’s planning to apply at 9 p.m. on November 31 will be pretty upset when they find servers jammed with thousands of other applicants trying to beat the deadline. Be honest, accurate and on time.

Finally, you have sent your application and all you have to do is wait a response, right? Wrong. Don’t forget to send your official transcripts and any letters of recommendation, portfolio, or other materials that may be required for admittance. Once you have completed the application process, it is then time to apply for financial aid for the academic year. Though the Scholarship Office organizes scholarships awarded to MCC students from private sources, “the majority of scholarships are funded by the MCC Foundation and are based on academic achievement,” according to the MCC website. The first step is to visit the Scholarship Office in building OC3000. There, students can speak with Scholarship Specialist Diane Danielewicz and ask all they questions they want. Students will typically be directed to the big red folder full of scholarship criteria and flyers. After browsing through the many scholarship opportunities, I found that most required me to go online for more information—typical right?

Although I found some opportunities that interest me, I was not prepared for how time consuming online applications are. Of course, there were the basic ‘personal and contact information’ questions, but why would these sites need to know my previous home address (as one site requested)?

I soon realized that many of the scholarship websites were just trying to get my contact information to give to advertisers who sponsor them, or so it seemed. After spending over 45 minutes at one website, I gave up. I understand that scholarship websites request detailed information about students’ life so they can pair them up with an appropriate scholarship opportunity, but do they really need to know if I have ever braided my hair (as yet another site requested)? So I put up with this part, as I am sure most of you can relate. I can not afford higher education on my own.

Onto the next step—do I submit yet? Of course not. The site then stated that in order to be eligible, I was required to visit all of their sponsor’s websites. I ended up clicking ‘cancel’ after I realized that there were 142 sponsors. I was not required to purchase anything, but visiting 142 websites would have taken hours.

Frustrated, I went to speak with Diane of the Scholarship Office. I questioned the security of scholarship websites and the reason for all the advertising. Diane helped me understand that the sites are mostly non-profit organizations that are supported by advertisers. She used the analogy of watching 20 minutes of commercials for only 10 minutes of news. Scholarships are available through a variety of resources, but websites are just more time consuming than most. Though I understand their reasoning, I was so completely fed up with the online scholarship ordeal that I am sticking to the paper packets I can pick up from the Scholarship Office. Unless you have an abundance of time and patience, I suggest you do the same.
Got issues? V2A endeavors to meet the challenge

We want to hear YOUR opinion!!!

There is a proposal being sent to the Board of Trustees October 16 asking for an increase of the parking fee of $5 and the Health Services fee of $2 to pay for parking lot renovations on the Oceanside campus, and added Health Services staff at the San Elijo campus.

Will you support these fee increases?

- The University Transfer Center has moved! We are now located in the new 3700 building.
- CSUSM will be on campus for individual appointments on November 19th.
- UCSD is on campus to answer your questions. Oct 2nd and Oct 4th from noon – 1:00 in room 3201.
- Everyone is welcome!

Question: What G.P.A. do I need to transfer to a UC school?
Answer: It depends on the particular college you are applying to, as well as the individual program (major) you are interested in. Miracosta College has several guaranteed admission programs with a variety of UC’s that have a beginning G.P.A. of 2.8. However, individual majors may have a higher G.P.A. requirement if they have more students qualifying than they have space for. To learn more about our Guaranteed Admission programs to the UC’s please stop by the University Transfer Center in the new 3700 building.

Question: Do CSU campuses require more than two years of high school foreign language to graduate?
Answer: Some CSU campuses require foreign language study as a part of the preparation for certain majors or for graduation. For example, Cal. State San Marcos requires students to demonstrate competency in a language other than English before graduation. This is usually demonstrated by three terms of the same foreign language. San Diego State University on the other hand does not have a language requirement to graduate, however almost half of the majors do. It is best to consult the campus’ catalog for major and graduation requirements and speak to a MCC counselor for any further questions.

Question: If I am interested in completing TAG and transferring to UCSD winter quarter what do I need to do?
Answer: Transfer guarantee contracts must be signed and submitted to UCSD at least one month prior to the beginning of the admissions period. The deadline for winter quarter is March 31st. Contracts cannot be written for more than two years in advance of the transfer quarter.

Voices 2 Action, a MiraCosta College club at the Oceanside campus, serves students yearly by finding solutions to the most pressing concerns of the student population. V2A has been active for the last two years in bringing to light the most substantial need for change regarding the student experience. Two years ago, health care was the number one issue among students. In response, V2A hosted a health fair, bringing in outside organizations that offered insurance, as well as providing information regarding medical and dental coverage.

Last year, the biggest dilemma was hunger. Addressing the basic need for a source of food for students lacking resources, V2A played a pivotal role by addressing the hunger problem, and the creation of the Food Bank at MCC.

Having associations with staff, faculty, and administrators, the club’s accomplishments are a measure of successful communication and implementation of ideas with beneficial goals aimed at addressing the needs of the students.

“It’s all about volunteerism and trying to resolve issues,” said Carol Wilkinson, the club advisor. There are no strict dedication requirements and the club is not politically oriented.

Involvement includes reaching out to students and addressing concerns of the student body as much as possible within the limits of the club’s capabilities.

The club president, Cathy Robin, has been recruiting members and held V2A’s first meeting on September 28.

“Students who want to make a change often feel that the task is too big to do alone,” said Wilkinson. “Voices to Action educates people about how to express their issues.”

To find the most severe nemesis to daily student life, V2A interviews students, creates comment drop boxes and lets students gripe on paper before an effort to poll for predicaments. The club was created to help raise awareness of the number of issues bothering the student populace and to help bring about a positive change that would alleviate some of the problems.

For a young guy, I wouldn’t see it necessary to have to go this far to become sexually aroused. If you have a good relationship with your girlfriend, I’m sure she would be more than happy to experiment in the bedroom—naturally.

Boy: There is no sense in decorating your medicine closet like you're in your 50's when you are in the midst of your sexual prime. Over the last few years, drugs like Viagra and Cialis have seen sales triple to men under the age of 45 looking to gain that edge in the bedroom or to counter the effects of other party drugs such as alcohol and ecstasy.

The issue is not whether or not it will work. It will. But using drugs like this recreationally isn't safe. We don't take aspirin if we aren't in pain. Why take Viagra if you aren't impotent?

While Viagra’s ultimate effect is to send more blood to the male organ, it seems to have no parallel effect on women according to Dr. Mitra Boolel. According to Dr. Boolel, “with women, things depend on a myriad of factors.” So why risk it? Save it for when you really need it.

Boy: There are two sides to this argument. Person A will tell you that pornography in a marriage is therapeutic. Men are going to have sexual fantasies about other women regardless of their situation. They're better in virtual reality than actual reality.

Person B will tell you that psychological research says pornography increases marital distress, decreased intimacy, decreased sexual satisfaction, and most importantly, infidelity. Person B sounds like they are going to be far better off. While men’s minds may wander often, the consensus in the psychological community is that porn is ultimately detrimental to a monogamous relationship. So turn off your computer screen, pervert.
